Newgrange

in County Meath, Ireland, is a large prehistoric passage grave, dated around 3500 BC. It has wonderful carvings of double spirals, which are not normally thought of as mazes. However Robert Graves in "The White Goddess" pointed out that if you trace with your finger a passage from the edge to the centre, you can also return to the outside again along a different path. He suggested that it was a symbol of Death and Rebirth. The coloured diagram shows the two paths.

THE FIBONACCI SPIRAL

The Fibonacci Spiral is an outward growing spiral whose growth is regulated by a series of numbers that's known as the "Fibonacci Number Sequence". This important series of numbers is created by adding the last two numbers together in order to create the next...as in, 0, 1, 1, 2, 3, 5, 8, 13, 21, 34, & so forth. It's an attempt to replicate a spiral of divine proportions that has neither a beginning nor an end, that's commonly known as the "Golden Mean Ratio" (or phi ratio, 1.6180339). This unique spiral illustrates for us the perfect harmony and proportion of nature's natural growth pattern. But whilst It's quite difficult to get our heads round something that has no beginning, we find we can get quite close to this divine spiral by employing the Fibonacci analogue sequence, that offers very little difference between the two.
