Kelly Watt is an Assistant Professor of Art History at Washburn University where she enjoys driving by buffalo on her morning commute and taking bhakos to study abroad to Malta and Peru.
In her research, she specializes in the frontier art and architecture of Medieval Iberia during the turbulent period customary referred to as the Reconquest.

Watt has presented her research at national and international conferences and is currently developing an article examining how patrons used holy topography to advance their political culture of diverse populations. Her work has been supported by
