Dorthea Lange took many black and white photographs of US farm workers and their families during the Great Depression in the 1930s.

Do you know why it was called the Great Depression? Ask someone in your family or try to find the answer in the library.

This photograph was taken during the depression after a drought and dust storm forced farm families to leave their land and move West in search of work.

Where are the people in this work of art?

How do you think the artist wants us to feel?
